Weekend Overview

Cold, damp weather helped keep attendance low this weekend at Rainbow Woods.

The evident autumn chill served as a strong reminder of how little time is left in this years camping season.

While some campers enjoy the autumn season, others begin the task of closing up their camps for the winter as the season winds down.

A few recurring weekend visitors did brave the cold to spend some time with us during what turned out to be a quiet relaxing weekend which found campers social-

Staying warm in the autumn chill

izing around warm and inviting campfires on individual sites.

This intimate socializing is a trend that we can expect to see more of as the temperatures drop and campers come to visit for either fall foliage or for their last visit of the year.

Even though the end is near for the season, it's not over yet as the fall foliage season, Columbus Day (our official last hurrah) and a possible Indian Summer are all on the horizon.

Family Weekend Added

At the request of seasonal campers, an additional Family Weekend has been scheduled for the campground for the last weekend of the season October 12 through October 14, 2007.

Family weekends are a regular event for the campground and allow seasonal permits the chance to share their camping experience with those who are close to them and usually not allowed on the grounds.

Certain campground restrictions will be in effect as seasonal campers may have friends and family members, of any age or gender, as guests.

Remember campers, your guests must register at the office and appropriate guest fees must be paid.

Please contact the office with any questions regarding Family Weekend.

Fall Foliage Season On The Way

The weather may be turning, but that is not the only thing. The mountains around the area of Rainbow Woods produce a brilliant display of color every year as fall foliage season begins.

Now is the time of year to revel in autumn camping.

Fairly warm days mean that campers can relax in the sun or take a scenic drive through the area to do some leaf peeping as the foliage peaks and mother nature shows us a vast array of color.

Then after the day is done, crisp cool nights mean campers can come back to their campsite for a warm and intimate fire,

Autumn can be a wonderful time to camp with us!
